Safe opening:

If you've forgotten your combination, don't worry! Almost any safe, from the small cabinet safe, to the highest security bank vault can be opened-each requiring specialized methods. Requirements are always different - burglary attempt, technical defect, lost code, inheritance, changing the lock, key duplication, loss of a key etc.- we can help in all of those cases.

Our first priority when opening a safe or vault is to do as little damage as possible. When opening safes we would look to use picking or manipulation methods if possible to minimize damage and allow the continued use of the safe. If it is necessary to drill the safe, we would adhere to the industry's Code of Practice for the reconditioning and repair of used safes. Drill holes can be repaired easily and after our repair, drill resistance is usually higher than before. Most of the safes we open can be repaired easily and continue to be used afterwards.

Each safe is assessed on an individual basis before any work is started. After assessing the safe, we will explain your options. There are occasions where a safe is so severely damaged, perhaps due to a burglary attempt or fire that it is beyond repair and needs replacing.

In our experience the most common problems experienced with safes resulting in our call out for service, include:

- Burglarized safe or failed burglary attempt.
- Lost or forgotten safe codes or combinations.
- Incorrect method used to change lock combination.
- The safe's electronic lock has locked the user out.
- The safe batteries need replacing.

- Something inside the safe is jamming the operation.
- The door closes but the bolts will not throw.
- Safe and lock has seized.
- The door will not close or is binding.
- Integral fault within the safe's door or lock. Lost or misplaced keys.
- A snapped key or part of the key has broken off in the safe's lock.
- The detachable part of the safe key is missing or has come off in the safe.
- The key will not go into the safe.
- The key goes into the safe but does not turn or only turns so far.
